ACCESS TO RECORDS AND PROTECTION OF PRIVACY

Bill C-25, entitled the Canadian Human Rights Act, received first reading in the House of Commons on 29 November 1976. One of its purposes is to protect the privacy of individuals "to the greatest extent consistent with public order and well-being." Under this bill, the use of personnel records for any purpose not closely related to that for which they were compiled will be prohibited. This would eliminate them as historical sources. Cabinet Directive No. 46, the present regulation on the subject, declares a personnel record to be no longer exempt from public access after its subject's ninetieth birthday, be he alive or dead. In addition, there is, at present, little or no restriction on an organization's use of its own records. Bill C-25, however, places no time limit on its own action, and the records affected by it would, it appears, be closed forever to individuals and institutions alike.

Historians may wish to express their views on the bill. One way for them to do so would be to write to their respective Members of Parliament. They might also write to Mr. G.W. Baldwin, M.P., who has sponsored a Right to Information Bill in previous sessions. This bill is not currently before the House, the government having announced that it would introduce a measure to the same effect as a result of the recent hearings on Mr. Baldwin's proposals. The CHA secretaries would be glad to receive a copy of any letter to an M.P. on this matter.

ONTARIO HISTORICAL SOCIETY

The Ontario Historical Society sponsors the journal Ontario History, distributes a semi-annual bulletin with news of local societies, publishes theses and is about to issue a series of technical leaflets on local history. The society also coordinates efforts with heritage societies and advises on individual requests for aid in preservation. The annual meetings usually take place late in June, and are held in co-operation with local societies in the province. The society's Research Publications Series now includes the following titles: Jean Burnet, Ethnic Groups in Upper Canada ($3.25); Gerald Hallowell, Prohibition in Ontario, 1919-1923 ($3.25); Clarence Karr, The Canada Land Company: The Early Years ($3.25); J.E. Rea, Bishop Alexander Macdonnell and the Policies of Upper Canada ($3.25) and Peter Schmalz, A History of the Saugeen Indians ($5.00). Also available are: Gerald Killan, Preserving Ontario's Heritage: A History of the Ontario Historical Society ($6.50); Edith Firth, ed., Profiles of a Province ($5.25); E.A. Cruikshank, ed., The Simcoe Papers (5 volumes; $25.50) and the Index to the Publications of the Ontario Historical Society ($3.25).

There is an urgent requirement to expand membership in order to maintain the level of activities, because on the one hand there is an increasing public awareness of the need to preserve our heritage and, on the other hand, an ever greater demand on the financial resources of the society. Present membership fees are $8.00 (individual), $10.00 (family) and $100.00 (life). For further membership information or copies of the society's publications, write Alice M. Davidson, Secretary, The Ontario Historical Society, 1466 Bathurst Street, Toronto, M5R 3J3.
